

Instructor Bios

Jennifer Suwak has worked in the film/video industry since the 90's. She has worked as a producer, reporter, editor, director and camera operator for TV, news, feature films & shorts. Her sculptures, stop-motion animation, and award-winning narrative & documentary films have won several awards and have been shown internationally in film festivals and galleries. She continues her freelance career while teaching production and theory courses in the Cinema, Television & Media Production department at Kutztown University.

She is currently working with filmmaking partner Steve Abruzzese on a feature documentary titled 'How's Timothy', a film about an Easton, PA resident, Timothy McNally. It deals with his mental health struggle, the difficulty in navigating our healthcare system, and his family's fight to advocate for him. Jen wants to shine a light on issues such as mental health, marginalized citizens and ageism in addition to interesting people who deserve a spotlight. Go on ROAMINGDINGO.COM for more details on their latest series and films.

Steve Abruzzese has been making films since graduating DeSales University in 2011. He operates camera and works as an engineer on productions for corporate events and programming. He also works on Sports productions and music programming for arena events.

He and Jen Suwak have made several documentaries and other projects together that have won awards and have played internationally. Their most recently completed film, 'Frank Parese, a Jersey Shore Veteran Story' has had virtual screenings at several festivals and events during the pandemic. Their latest film in production is a feature documentary about Tim McNally, an Easton, PA resident who struggled greatly with mental health issues while trying to navigate the healthcare system. Steve wants to shine a light on interesting people who deserve a spotlight. Go on ROAMINGDINGO.COM for more details on their latest series 'Ocean County People' and other films and projects.

Ryan Cleland has worked in IT for many years. He has worked on various short films and has been a part of our Filmmaking camps on and off for the last 8 years. He continues to work in the Production Engineering team for WarnerMedia. Mr. Cleland has earned his B.A. in Television & Film, and his B.S. in Computer Science from DeSales University.

Images below

